Introduction

Welcome to the grammar component for EN011 English in Action and EN012 English for Daily Life. In this supplementary book I will try to provide you with some further insight into the spoken and written aspect of grammar in English language use so as to better prepare you for life at Bangkok University.

The materials are aimed at students with an elementary level of English. While I know you have been introduced to proper English grammar use in the past, this course aims to review what you already know as well as to prepare you for more difficult aspects of grammar in the English language.

This book is devised into ten lessons and as such it cannot cover all of the English grammar aspects. Instead, it should be seen as an opportunity to review what you have already learned, as well as to utilize and develop the English grammar skills you already possess. English Grammar in Action will help to prepare you for life as a student at Bangkok University where you will be required to read, write, listen, and speak in an English language setting.

Hopefully, having successfully completed English Grammar in Action you will feel more comfortable using English in all your other classes here at the University.

I hope you enjoy this book and should you have any feedback concerning the material, please feel free to discuss such matters with me. I am based in the Language Institute.

Happy Learning,

Paul Adams
